David Foster is a UK based Singer/Songwriter & Producer.

Born in Bermondsey, South London David Foster later moved out to North Hertfordshire where he grew up. David expressed a big interest in music from a very young age and eventually got his first guitar when he was eight. David had always shown a love for guitar music and some of his earliest influences were the likes of Mick Taylor (The Rolling Stones), Jimi Hendrix and in particular Johnny Winter; whose live version of Johnny B Goode became somewhat of a trade mark for David as a youngster which ultimately led to his first public performance at the age of eleven.

David started to pursue his aspirations of being a Singer/Songwriter at the age of thirteen when he began actively writing songs for his first band; formed in early September 2006. Around this same time David would spend his Saturday's learning music technology in the local music school and it was here where he discovered a love for recording and producing music.

In the years 2008-2011, aside from his educational obligations, David actively toured as the lead guitarist of a Chicago blues band. In this three year stint he received high acclaim at many festivals and shows across the UK.

Although growing up predominantly playing the electric guitar, David is also classically trained.

Upon leaving full-time education David has taken time to write more music and now has a catalogue of over fifty original songs. He is currently based at "The Roost" Studio where he continues to write and produce music.

David continues to develop and refine his music and looks to continue to grow in all aspects of his career.

Currently David performs live as a solo artist and with his Trio delivering his brand of Rock n Roll music.
